Joe is a recently divorced man who lived with and cared for his elderly parents until their deaths. This loss triggered a depression, which soon resulted in his loss of employment. Within a few weeks, he could no longer pay his rent and became homeless. Working with the case manager at Wainscott Hall, an assessment was done to better understand Joe’s strengths and weaknesses in the areas of mental health, physical health, employment and housing history, and social support systems. A Success Plan was completed for Joe that included an action plan for building skills in weak areas and maximizing personal strengths and resources. Joe received shelter, food assistance, counseling, referrals to a medical provider, employment search assistance, budgeting classes and life skills. Within three weeks he landed a new job and his mood lifted considerably. He began making friends and became a quiet leader among other shelter residents. Joe worked with the case manager to budget his earnings and save for his move and, within three months, Joe relocated a three-bedroom apartment that he now resides in with other former shelter residents.
